Searching for Security Management Articles in Business Source Complete

Webster University Library  March 2012

To conduct a search, you will need to narrow your topic. If you aren’t sure how you wish to narrow, you can start broadly with “security management.”

Continuing down the pale blue column under your results, you will find a variety of limiters to narrow your search. Some of the most common are noted below.

- If you need academic journals, you can select the box marked “Scholarly (peer reviewed) Journals.”
- You can also narrow the date range.
- So, if you change your search to only scholarly journals in the last five years, you can reduce the number significantly.

Also, note that any added limiters are signified with an orange box with a white X.

If a limiter gives you too few results, you can click on the orange box to eliminate the selection and to return to your previous list.
Further down this light blue column, you will find a variety of Subject terms that will help you to focus on more specific aspects of this broad topic.

If you scroll down and select “biometric identification” (the rest of the screen will be in shadows) and click on update, you will see the new selection in your limiters.

Also, notice that you now have a reasonable number of items to begin working with.

Once you have a manageable number of possible items, you can retrieve articles as noted below.

Note about full-text:
Often the full-text of the article is linked from within the database.

If you don’t see a link, use the Article Linker feature to see if the full-text is available online in another database or the library.
From the Article Linker box, click on the Article link to access the article from the database listed.
If the text is not online, use the ClioWeb III/DocDel tool to request it. If we do not own the title, allow five business days for the library to request it for you from another library and post it to your ClioWeb account.

If you have questions or need help, you can contact the Reference Desk for further assistance.